There's Something About Christmas by the Sea

The holidays have a way of feeling a little different on St. George Island. Here, Christmas morning might begin with coffee overlooking the Gulf instead of a cold-weather commute, and a walk on the beach after Christmas dinner can replace the usual rush from one gathering to the next. There are sunsets instead of snow, salty breezes instead of winter coats, and plenty of room for the kids to run while the adults actually sit back and enjoy the moment. Gather everyone around a big table, linger a little longer over dinner, and let the evening unfold without checking the clock.

You don't have to give up the traditions that make the holidays special—you simply get to experience them in a different setting. The laughter, the shared meals, the stories around the table, the familiar rituals and the people you love most are still there. Only now, there's a little more breathing room between them. A little more time together. A little less hurry. Trade the winter rush for a little salt air and a lot more time together.

Island Inspiration: The Gift of Time

The holidays remind us that the greatest gifts rarely come wrapped. They're found in the extra hour around the dinner table, the slow morning coffee, the spontaneous beach walk, and the conversations that stretch long after the sun goes down. On St. George Island, there's room to put the calendar away, leave the rushing behind, and simply be together. Because sometimes the most luxurious gift you can give the people you love is time—and plenty of it.

SCAVENGER HUNT

Island Spotlight

Holiday traditions look a little different on St. George Island—and that's part of the fun. On December 4, families gather at Lighthouse Park for the annual Lighting of the Palms & Winter Wonderland, featuring Santa, holiday treats, children's activities, and a lighted golf cart parade at dusk.

Until Next Time

The holidays are about slowing down long enough to notice what matters—the laughter around the table, the people beside you, the stories that get told year after year, and the sunset you stopped to watch because, for once, there was nowhere else you needed to be. On St. George Island, there's a little more room for all of it. Room for long mornings over coffee, afternoons spent barefoot on the beach, dinners that stretch well into the evening, and the kind of quiet moments that become the memories you treasure most.

Maybe that's the real magic of a holiday by the sea. The traditions are still there, but the pace is different. There's less rushing, fewer schedules, and more time to simply enjoy being together. Whether it's gathering around a table filled with family favorites, watching the kids race toward the water, or ending the day beneath a colorful Gulf sunset, these are the moments that stay with us long after the decorations come down.

Here's to fewer schedules, longer conversations, sandy feet, and memories that last long after the holidays are over. And if the season has taught us anything, it's that the best gift of all may simply be having more time with the people we love.
