The Island Saves Its Best for Winter

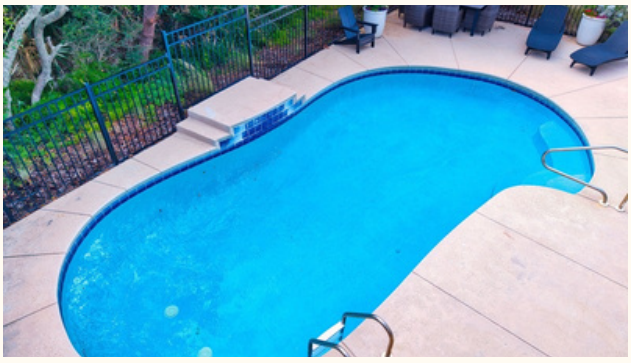
Something happens to St. George Island after the holidays. The bridge traffic thins out, the beach goes quiet for miles, and the Gulf turns that clear, cool blue you only see in winter. Mornings start with coffee and a blanket on the balcony. Afternoons are for long walks, shelling after a north wind, and don't forget lunch in Apalachicola without the summer wait.

At Latitude Adjustment, winter looks like five bedrooms and nowhere you have to be. The private pool can be heated, the hot tub is ready when the sun goes down, and the great room is made for card games that run late. It's the season for families who like room to spread out, friends who finally have time to catch up, and anyone who would rather trade a gray January for a Gulf sunset.

So when the holidays wrap up, think about coming down for a slower week. The island will be ready.

Island Inspiration: A Winter Day Well Spent

Sleep in. Walk the beach while the tide is low and the shells are easy to find. Drive over to Apalachicola for oysters and a wander through the shops downtown. Come home for a soak in the hot tub, then claim a chair for the sunset, which arrives early this time of year and never seems to hurry. Dinner is whatever someone feels like cooking. Tomorrow, repeat.



Winter Weeks

January weeks are open at $3,500 + tax, Saturday to Saturday. Or stay the season: a Snowbird month starting January 2 is $12,500 + tax. Pool heat is available for $400 a week.

CHECK DATES

Island Spotlight

Until Next Time

If this issue has a theme, it's this: the island doesn't close for winter, it just exhales. The crowds go home, the light gets softer, and the people who know better come down for a week that feels like it belongs entirely to them.

We'd love to see you here for it. Whether you're picturing a quiet January with your favorite people, a month away from the cold, or a few days of sunsets and long dinners before spring gets busy, tell us what you have in mind. We know this house down to the last beach chair, and we're happy to help you plan the week, answer every question, and point you toward the island spots that are at their best this time of year.

Until then, we'll be here doing our part: walking the empty beach, watching the early sunsets, and saving a seat at the table for you.

Happy Thanksgiving
from all of us at Latitude Adjustment
